Fortas Stresses Human Outlay Before Capital In Foreign Aid

A "new emphasis" in foreign aid that would place the highest priority on education and training in underdeveloped nations was urged by U.S. Supreme Court Justice Abe Fortas, in New York. Asserting that aid programs have too often foundered because of overstress on capital rather than "human investment," says the New York Times, Justice Fortas, who was appointed to the high court by President Johnson last July, asserted in a speech prepared for delivery:

"We have too many examples of substantial investments in capital goods to which we have contributed, which have yielded negligible results because of the lack of trained people for industry and government."

His remarks were made at the dinner session of the forty-fourth annual meeting of the American Organization for Rehabilitation through Training before five hundred delegates at the Commodore Hotel.

ORT is the Jewish overseas vocational training agency. It has programs in twenty-one countries.

Appealing for action "directed plainly, simply, and immediately to feed, house, educate, train, and heal the peoples themselves," Justice Fortas said:

"The great lack of the nations that are the generative spots of world infection is, I suggest, not only capital investment, perhaps not primarily capital investment, but investment in people, their health, education and training."

He cited the work of ORT as "an example for the world of a fundamental truth, that first and last, progress must come through the improvement of the knowledge and skills of people."

The delegates adopted a budget of $12-million, highest in the organization's history. This year it is designed to expand ORT programs for 50,000 persons in its schools abroad.

Dr. William Haber, president of the organization, announced the adoption of a five-year plan to expand vocational and educational services to impoverished and displaced Jews overseas.

He said that key elements in the plan included the following steps:—increasing ORT trade and technical high schools facilities, and the establishment of a network of apprenticeship centers in Israel to admit larger numbers of immigrant youth; the creation of teacher training programs; the construction of new trade schools in France to serve job training needs of 200,000 recent North African Jewish immigrants.

Dr. Haber, Dean of the University of Michigan, said that major increases of the budget were assigned to ORT programs in Israel, France, Iran, India, and Morocco.

In a message to the convention, President Johnson cited ORT for its training programs throughout the world, says the New York Times, asserting that "amidst the horrors of war and upheaval, you have provided strength for more than survival, you have brought the hope of renewal to countless thousands."

Birch Society Compared To Hitlerian Nazi Party; A.D.L. Official Of Bnai Brith Refuses To Shake Hand Of Society Director

New York Police Commissioner Howard R. Leary condemned the John Birch Society. He called it "abhorrent" and said he would forbid policemen to join "if I had the authority." But he said he would consult with Corporation Counsel J. Lee Rankin "and be guided by his opinion" as to whether policemen could legally be members of the society.

Mr. Leary spoke at a turbulent hearing of the Joint Legislative Committees on Election and Corporation Law in the State Office Building, 270 Broadway, writes Eric Pace in the New York Times. The hearing was called after a recent statement by the Commissioner that he saw no harm in policemen belonging to the militantly conservative group if their "efficiency" was not impaired.

Because of reported anonymous threats to Committee members, fifteen state policemen stood guard as Mr. Leary and other witnesses testified.

The other witnesses included City Council President Frank D. O'Connor, who compared the Birch Society to the Hitlerian Nazi party, and former Representative John H. Rousselot, the Society's national publicity director.

Mr. Rousselot asserted that his group, in its monolithic nature, resembled the Roman Catholic Church.

Sharp words punctuated the seven-hour hearing. One Committee counsel, Nelson Seitel, snapped at Mr. Rousselot: "According to your documents, you want to hang [Communists] and club them."

Mr. Seitel referred in part to a passage on leadership in a Society manual that pictures a "dictatorial and dynamic boss" calling on hypothetical followers to "get the heaviest clubs you can find and don't hesitate to break the heads of any saboteurs you find."

Mr. Rousselot insisted that the passage was "an allegory." "The club of exposure — I think it's what it's referring to," he maintained, says the New York Times.

"Taking violent action — we don't feel that's our job. That's something for the F.B.I."

The former Congressman has defended the Society in the past against critics who linked it with anti-Semitism and said it was hostile to the civil rights movement.

Taking the offensive, he contended that the Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith, by making charges of anti-Semitism, had indirectly "encouraged the anti-Semites to come into our group."

"We don't want 'em," he said.

Earlier, an official of the Anti-Defamation League, Arnold Forster, refused to shake Mr. Rousselot's hand, saying: "He's not the kind of man whose hand I care to shake."

An avowed anti-Semite, George Lincoln Rockwell, of the American Nazi party, went under subpoena, to the hearing, puffing on a corncob pipe.

A lean, scowling figure, Mr. Rockwell departed after being instructed to testify before the committees at a later hearing scheduled for March 28, says the New York Times. "This is a crap game like I never got into," Mr. Rockwell said. "I was subpoenaed to harass the hell out of me."

The hearing room was crowded with members of the National Renaissance party, wearing the lightning-bolt insignia of their organization; several state troopers, an off-duty policeman who is in the Birch Society — Patrolman John Michael Donohue — and representatives of the New York Civil Liberties Union and the American Jewish Committee.

The Civil Liberties representative, Aryeh Neier, took a dim view of proceedings. In a formal statement released while Mr. Rousselot was still answering Committee questions, Mr. Neier said:

"As the day wore on it seemed more and more as though the New York State Committee on un-American activities had come into existence. The Committees clearly exceeded their legislative mandates. They unconstitutionally inquired into areas protected by the First Amendment. As Justice [William O.] Douglas said . . . 'the views a citizen entertains . . . and the people he associates with are no concern of the government.'"

A different view was taken by Assemblyman Bertram L. Podell, Democrat of Brooklyn, who asked many of the Committee's questions. He told Mr. Leary, former Police Commissioner in Philadelphia, says the New York Times, "We want to test you to see how you do in the big league."

Mr. Leary said: "I can assure you as Police Commissioner that should evidence develop that a police officer has allowed his personal prejudice to interfere with his basic responsibility to his job, he will be called to account. . . .

"But we must not . . . deny to every police officer his right as a citizen to maintain personal views and preferences — just so long as he does not permit them to interfere with his duty."

1965 Sale Of $91,392,800 In Bonds Set Record In Aid To Israel

A record-breaking total of $91,392,800 in State of Israel Bonds was sold during 1965 in the United States, Canada, and other countries, it was reported by Dr. Joseph J. Schwartz, vice-president of the Israel Bond Organization. This represents the largest sum ever sold in one year in the entire history of the drive, which began in 1951, Dr. Schwartz said. The 1965 total, he pointed out, constitutes an increase of seven per cent over the previous year, when Israel Bond proceeds reached $85,380,350.

Dr. Schwartz presented his report at a two-day meeting of regional representatives and national executives of the Israel Bond Organization, at the Roosevelt Hotel, in New York, to plan extended economic development aid for Israel this year.

"The outstanding results achieved in 1965," Dr. Schwartz said, "reflect mounting confidence in the continued growth of Israel as a vital center of democratic development. They also indicate a keen awareness of the need to promote industrialization as a means of modernizing its economy and maintaining its expanding population on a Western standard of living." Of the total of $91,392,800 in [srael] Bonds sold during 1965, Dr. Schwartz reported: $76,655,500 was sold in the United States; $5,460,750 in Canada; $4,162,750 in Latin America; and $5,113,800 in Western Europe. More than 200,000 individuals subscribed to Israel Bonds last year and bank purchases amounted to more than $12,000,000. During 1965 the sum of $41,800,000 was paid out by the State of Israel in the redemption of matured Israel Bonds. Another $8,998,266 went to investors in interest payments on Israel Bonds last year. Current Third Development Bonds pay four percent per annum.

Other speakers included Samuel Rothberg, national campaign chairman of the Israel Bond Organization; and Nahum Shamir, Israel's Economic Minister to the U.S. Announcing a worldwide quota of $105,000,000 for the 1966 Israel Bond drive, Mr. Rothberg said:

"Israel faces growing requirements for economic development to provide for a large influx of immigrants and to enhance its competitive position on world markets. Israel Bond funds are indispensable for the fulfillment of these goals. Israel's economic achievements have a vital bearing on the success of its historic revival as a state. Every new factory, every new farm settlement and every percentage point of increase in the gross national product, reflect and affirm the rebirth of a whole nation."

Mr. Rothberg said that the 1966 campaign for Israel Bonds was to be launched at the international inaugural conference at the Fontainebleau Hotel, in Miami Beach, Florida.

In his address, Mr. Shamir observed that the outstanding economic event in Israel during 1965

Myra Hess Was One Of The Most Beloved Pianists Of The Century; Directed War-Time Concerts

Myra Hess, one of the leading pianists of this century, died at her home in London recently. She was 75 years old. Myra Hess was one of the most beloved pianists of the century.

Dame Myra, who had been in failing health for several months, died peacefully in her 130-year-old Georgian house in St. John's Wood, a residential area just north of the center of London, says the New York Times. She had been living in retirement, except for occasional teaching since 1961.

On that date, she gave her last public performance, playing at the Royal Festival Hall in London in a program commemorating the 21st anniversary of the end of the Battle of Britain in World War II. A rheumatic condition that began to affect her hands halted her concert career.

Despite illnesses during her retirement, Dame Myra retained a lively interest in music. She followed radio concerts and would go out now and then to attend recitals by promising pianists.

Dame Myra was beloved by London concert-goers to a degree unequaled by any other pianist. Part of this affection began in World War II, when she organized and directed lunch-time concerts at the National Gallery.

They continued for six and one-half years, during which time Dame Myra, who contributed her services, played more than 120 solo recitals. She also participated in chamber-music programs. The concerts were heard by more than 700,000 persons, each of whom paid one shilling.

The Queen Mother Elizabeth, who was then the Queen, was a frequent visitor to the concerts. She later described her visits as "some of the happiest hours of the dark times through which we have passed."

On her 75th birthday Dame Myra Hess was honored by a British Broadcasting Corporation program of her recordings and comments, and she was showered by birthday greetings from friends and admirers throughout the world, says the New York Times. One of these tributes was a performance by the violinist, Isaac Stern, of "Happy Birthday," in a special broadcast.

Myra Hess was born in Hampstead, near London, on February 25, 1890. She was the youngest of four children. Her father, an Orthodox Jew, taught them Hebrew and familiarized them with the traditional melodies of the Sabbath service.

The child displayed musical aptitude at an early age. At five, she could play bits of tunes on the piano and improvise accompaniments for them, although she had had no formal study.

A local music teacher then began to give her weekly piano lessons, but within two years the pupil had surpassed the teacher as a musician. At seven, she was sent to the Guildhall School of Music, where she studied with Julian Pascal and Robert Orlando Morgan and won the gold medal for piano-playing.

In 1902, when she was twelve Miss Hess won a scholarship to the Royal Academy of Music, and for the next five years she studied with Tobias Matthay.

Many years later, she said: "The turning point in my career came when I began lessons with Tobias Matthay, whom I consider the greatest inspirational teacher I know of. I had a startling awakening to all the beauties of music of which I had not even dreamed. He taught me the habit of enjoying my music as music, and that was the chief factor in finally molding me into a pianist."

On January 25, 1908, the year after her graduation from the Royal Academy, Miss Hess made her debut in a recital at Aeolian Hall in London. Strangely, in view of what was to follow, she received only brief reviews, stating little more than that the debut had taken place.

In November, 1908, Miss Hess appeared at Queen's Hall in London as soloist with Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic Orchestra in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. Four. Engagements with other orchestras followed, but they did little to gain recognition for the young pianist.

A partial explanation was that Miss Hess, then as later was an unspectacular performer who scorned virtuosity for its own sake. After these tentative steps towards a career, says the New York Times, Miss Hess withdrew from the concert stage for further study and incessant practice. On her return to playing concerts, Miss Hess was discovered by London audiences, and she at once assumed a status of eminence among women pianists.

She was not a militant feminist, but it did annoy her to be called a woman pianist. "Why should I be called a 'woman' pianist?" she once asked. "There are good and bad artists. Plain 'pianist' is good enough for me."

Miss Hess made her United States debut in 1922 and thereafter appeared in America almost every year, except for World War II. In March, 1961, she gave her last New York recital, at Hunter College.

In 1936, King George V conferred on Miss Hess the rank of Commander of the Order of the British Empire. In 1941, King George VI made her a Dame Commander for establishing the lunchtime concerts at the National Gallery.

In a review of her New York debut recital in Aeolian Hall on January 17, 1922, Richard Aldrich of the New York Times wrote:

"Miss Hess is a strongly individual artistic personality, self-possessed, reposeful; but she is one who is devoted wholly to expounding the music she plays and who takes no thought of injecting her personality into it, or of making a display of her powers as a performer."

Some years later, Lawrence Gilman, of the New York Herald Tribune, wrote:

"She was always a poet, sensitive and exquisite, finely touched and richly gifted, an interpreter of the sacerdotal kind — dedicated and absorbed and self-effacing. But she has ripened from a lyric poet to an epical one."

When Britain entered the war on September 3, 1939, Dame Myra was packing her bags for what would have been the longest tour of her career, taking her across the United States and on to Australia.

To the dismay of her managers, she shut up her piano and canceled all engagements outside Britain. She joined the Women's Voluntary Service and began assisting in the evacuation of London children to the country, says the New York Times. Almost immediately she had the idea that resulted in the National Gallery concerts. The first one was on October 10, 1939; the last, April 10, 1946. By then, 1,698 musical events had been presented in the series.

Bombs did not stop the performances. During one bad spell of air raids, the piano was moved into the basement, and the concerts continued. And once when a time bomb hit the Gallery, the concerts were moved across Trafal-

Denburg, Rabbi, assisted by Cantor Arieh L. Subar. The bride was given in marriage by her father, and Mrs. Jack Glogower, her great-aunt. She wore a fitted, white, peau de soie gown; appliqued with seed-pearl beads. Her tulle illusion veil was draped with a lace crown; and she carried a prayer book with a bouquet of white orchids. Mrs. Abe Gmora, sister-in-law of the bride, was matron of honour. Can You Help Here?

This letter to the Review was written on behalf of two ladies who are sisters and residents of the Maimonides Hospital And Home For The Aged, in Montreal, and confined to wheel chairs. One is a blind person, who was very capable for many years in looking after a home, and caring for her sister who is a cerebral palsy victim and quite helpless. However, in January, 1965, the blind sister had a stroke and was left partially paralyzed as a result, and since she could not manage a home and the care of her sister, the only alternative was the Home, where they were admitted. Since they are a little younger than the other residents, and unable to get around by themselves they are restricted a lot to their room and as a result are very lonely. They would appreciate visitors and occasional outings. If interested, please call 737-8794.

A NEW KIND OF STUDENT: TORAH AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING IN ISRAEL

In the past the young scholars of the Meah Shearim section of Jerusalem, in Safed, and in other centers of ultra-Orthodox Seminaries were content to spend their lives in study, withdrawn from earthly ways and uninterested in earthly rewards. Today they can still spend their lives in study but, at the same time, they can, and are prepared to, make a meaningful contribution to the continuing progress of their communities and their country.

Into these centers of Hebrew learning, where pale-faced scholars pore over their books in dimly-lit rooms, the Joint Distribution Committee has brought the outside world. Today some 1,600 students out of a total of about 15,000 enrolled in the 115 JDC-supported Seminaries are combining Torah studies with vocational training. In a special program inaugurated in 1952 by JDC, with United Jewish Appeal funds, they are learning metal work, agro-mechanics, electro-mechanics, precision tooling, and other trades, under ORT direction. Another 3,500 students have added secondary secular education to their Torah studies. All told, almost a third of the students today receive training over and above their Torah studies.

In addition, JDC inaugurated a special program in 1957 to encourage advanced religious training and scholarship. This includes scholarships to top level students for special training as scholars, high ranking seminary lecturers, or rabbinical judges; research fellowships in Biblical or Talmudic research, including deciphering manuscripts, collating sources, and editing texts; training religious leadership for Sephardic communities in Israel and other countries where the need for such leadership is acute; community service fellowships to enable advanced students to give religious guidance in immigrant communities; and scholarships to encourage training of teachers and other religious functionaries such as scribes, shochetim, etc. Several hundred scholarships have been granted under this program.

One of the unexpected but welcome dividends of this program was the departure recently of 15 married students, together with their families, to the newly created and still developing township of Beth Shemesh. There they have volunteered to do social work, teach the Torah to the new immigrants, and help the new community in other ways to continue to develop.

Another was the establishment of a seminary in the religious kibbutz agricultural settlement, She'alavim, a stone's throw from the Jordanian border. More and more the scholars are filtering out into the communities preaching love of Torah while working with their hands to build their Biblical homeland.

ISRAEL BONDS

was the opening of the port of Ashdod, on the Mediterranean south of Tel Aviv. The new port, constructed with the aid of Israel Bond proceeds and other funds, may well rival Haifa Harbor in the next decade, he said.

"The opening of Ashdod, which is expected to handle some 1,000,000 tons of shipping during its first year of operation, is particularly important because of Israel's concentration on the development of the Negev," Mr. Shamir said. "The same purpose is served by the new railroad link between Beersheba and Dimona, which was completed late last year. We expect to bring the railroad further south to Elath, the southernmost point in Israel, in the near future.

"The industrialization of the country, which is vital to our future, moved forward significantly during 1965 with the aid of Israel Bonds. Industries were established in a number of the new development areas as well as in the urban centers, and industrial employment rose to 220,000, its highest level in our history. With the National Water Project moving into full operation, new sections of the country have been brought under irrigation, especially in the Negev, and Israel has reached the point where it now provides 85 per cent of its own food requirements. In addition, Israel Bonds in 1965 helped to finance the construction of 39,000 housing units; the exploitation of natural resources; the promotion of tourism; and the development of other facets of the country's economy. During the year, Israel's gross national product increased by ten per cent," the Israel leader stated.

Outlining some of Israel's plans for economic development with the aid of Israel Bonds, Mr. Shamir predicted an increase in industrial production of 50 to 60 per cent by 1970, as compared with the 1965 figure of nearly $2,100,000,000. Exports, he said, are expected to reach $1,000,000,000 by that time, as compared with $750,000,000 for 1965.

He stressed the need of spreading industrial plants into outlying development areas to provide for an annual population increase of four per cent or 100,000, half of it consisting of new immigrants. Israel's population today is 2,580,000. Israel is turning to the expansion of industries which depend less on costly raw materials and more on specialized skills, Mr. Shamir declared. Prominent among these would be the optical industry, electronic, and fine chemicals.

MYRA HESS

gar Square to South Africa House for a few days.

"Our first ambition was to provide an antidote to the prevailing sense of doom and destruction," Dame Myra once said. "Gradually we found we were realizing the ideal that music should have an integral part in the life of the nation."

Several years after the war, Dame Myra was giving a recital at Bryn Mawr College in Pennsylvania, when a bat flew into the auditorium. The women in the audience began to scream and rush for the doors. Dame Myra, who had been through a war, was not about to be upset by a bat.

She watched the confusion with some amusement for a while, but soon she became impatient. Finally, even though the bat was still flitting about, she asked coolly, "Shall we go on?" And, turning back to the piano, she did.

Dame Myra was known for carrying her own piano stool with her wherever she appeared. Her hunched figure and hair style were so familiar that those who did imitations of her did not even have to say whom they were mimicking.

When she was younger, Dame Myra liked motoring and tennis as hobbies. In later years, her recreations, which included bridge, were quieter, says the New York Times. Dame Myra never married. One of her closest associates over the years was Anita Gunn, her secretary and travelling companion since 1931.

One of her strongest and continuing links with the early romantics was her use of the printed music in recital, a practice that was universal in the early nineteenth century but extremely rare in modern times, says the New York Herald Tribune. In 1936, she became the first instrumentalist to become a Commander of the Order of the British Empire. In 1941, in recognition of her remarkable war-time performances, she was made a Dame Commander and gained the Gold Medal of the Royal Philharmonic Society. She had a long list of honorary degrees from English universities.

The New York Tribune led off a story about her 1923 return to the U. S. with the following observation: "So much has been said about the piano playing of Myra Hess, her genius and her artistry, that it would seem all adjectives and superlatives were exhausted from repetition."

Passover at Kutsher's is a holiday as well as a Holy Day

At Kutsher's, the Passover starts off with the golden tones of Cantor Sholom Katz and the Samuel Sterner Choir. (Dietary laws, of course.) Then, you can go a few holes on our 18-hole golf course, take a swim in our heated indoor pool, limber up in our indoor health club, play a little badminton or tennis, ice-skate on our artificial rink... or you can just snooze the day away in one of the over-stuffed chairs in our beautiful new lobby. At night, you can live it up in our 2 night clubs (enclosed lakeside promenade from lobby and dining room to the clubs), laugh it up watching our great Broadway entertainment, dance it up until dawn... and don't worry about the kids. We've got enough to keep them busy day and night. As busy as we keep you. OK?

NOTICE ABOUT PICTURES

The Canadian Jewish Review is now considering photographs for the Festival Magazine Issues for Passover, and the New Year.

Preference is given to photographs posed before a plain, unfigured background; and all photographs must be straight, front-view; and finished studio pictures. Glossy proofs are required.

Do not accept dark pictures for reproduction in the sepia section of the Review from your photographer as they are not acceptable. Pictures, especially of children, must be light rather than dark and shadowed. Insist on this must.

Candid photographs can never be taken with the same care as photographs in a studio, with studio lighting. Ask your photographer to arrange for studio photographs, too, particularly for weddings and bar-mitzvahs!

POWERFUL WALKING BRAIN OF SEVENTH AVENUE

"The average production worker in New York's women's and children's industry earns about $4,000 a year," David Dubinsky shouted in a reporter's ear. "You hear what I'm telling you," he bellowed — "$4,000 — and some make less."

But the peppery 73-year-old boss of the International Ladies Garment Worker's Union refused to speculate on the future for the union's 175,000 members in New York, writes Dan Dorfman in the New York Herald Tribune. "You've asked me that question five times already and I'm getting tired of it," he said. The sixth time, though, brought a reply.

Mr. Dubinsky objected to a reporter's use of the word "plight" in discussing the garment worker, pointing out that there are cutters who earn as much as $8,000, $9,000, and $10,000 a year. And they consider it a respectable industry, he said.

The diminutive union leader is as active as ever in the union's day-to-day activities, and is one of the most powerful forces on Seventh Avenue. He was quick to note that cutters, the most skilled and highest paid production workers — represent only 10 per cent of the industry's labor force.

For the rest, he said, "it's a struggle." Many work only nine or ten months a year. "These people have really sacrificed themselves for their children," he said.

Mr. Dubinsky was interviewed at the Fifth Avenue Hotel where he paced back and forth as he spoke. He envisions a continuing shift in the ethnic makeup of the union's production workers.

He predicted that an increasing number of Negroes and Puerto Ricans will enter the labor force, with a continuing drop in the number of Jewish and Italian workers.

The labor leader praised the Jews and Italians for giving dignity to the industry — for fighting for decent working conditions and better management-labor relations, says the New York Herald Tribune. But he observed that the children of these workers are discouraged from going into the garment production field because of the lack of potential.

While there is no known statistical breakdown by race of the ILGWU's labor force in New York, knowledgeable industry sources put the Jewish and Italian representation at about 65 to 70 per cent. Negroes and Puerto Ricans account for another 15 to 20 per cent, according to estimates.

Mr. Dubinsky said as Negroes and Puerto Ricans attain the same skills as veteran union members, they would move increasingly into more important and better paid jobs.

The union chief was reluctant to say how big he thinks the Negro and Puerto Rican labor force may ultimately be. He did note, however, that the liberalization of immigration laws could result in the influx of a new group into the garment industry's labor force.

Ruler of a labor force of 440,000 union workers across the country, Mr. Dubinsky said an almost conciliatory climate exists between union and employers.

"I think there's mutual respect, confidence in one another," he said. "It's quite a difference from 50 years ago when we had to strike every six months."

The last market-wide strike took place in the dress industry in 1958 — the first one in 25 years.

But this doesn't mean that management isn't dealing with a demanding individual when contract talks come up.

Said one association executive: "Take Superman and Captain Marvel and put them together — and God help them if they tangle with Dubinsky."

The union boss takes a realistic view of the situation. "While we recognize the need for substantial increases and fight for them," he said, "we make demands that we know can be met. We don't build false hopes for the workers and we settle pretty close to what we ask for."

Mr. Dubinsky noted that the ILGWU would soon hold contract talks with two of the industry's largest firms. "I'm not anticipating any strike," he said, reports the New York Herald Tribune. It's not difficult to deal with the giants, Mr. Dubinsky said. "They're doing well and will not endanger their structure by permitting a strike."

What would happen if I opened an apparel firm tomorrow and didn't want any part of the ILGWU? What would you do?, Mr. Dubinsky was asked.

"We would try to organize you," he said. "You might beat us for a while by hiding in an isolated place, but eventually we'd catch up with you."

About 30 years ago, he recalled, 75 per cent of all women's and children's wear was produced in New York. Many firms moved to nearby areas, such as Pennsylvania, Connecticut, and Massachusetts, to escape unions and to get cheaper labor.

"But we fooled them," he recalled with a grin. "And we unionized them."

He estimated that New York's production of women's and children's wear has dropped since then about a third to 50 per cent of the nation's output. But the percentage of the dollar volume accounted for by New York manufacturers, he pointed out, has dropped only about five per cent to 70 per cent.

The Polish-born union skipper, who just is 74 years of age, sees a bright future for New York's garment industry. It will continue to be the creative styling arm and the distribution center for the nation's apparel, he said.

And the small manufacturer — if he has the skill and money to withstand a bad season or two — can survive and do well with an annual $1 to $2 million annual volume, Mr. Dubinsky declared.

"Look at Ben Zuckerman and Norell," he said. "They don't do big volume. But they're successful and probably derive more satisfaction out of the prestige and reputation they enjoy than they would if they were doing $100 million a year."

Any thoughts of retiring, he was asked? "I've been thinking about it quite often lately and for quite a number of years," he said, reports the New York Herald Tribune. Said one of his close associates: "You can ask him the same question twenty years from now when he tries to organize the garment workers on the moon."

STANDARDS FOR WEDDING CEREMONIES PROPOSED FOR CONSERVATIVE RABBIS

Conservative rabbis and cantors are advised not to officiate at weddings held at non-kosher catering establishments and hotels in a set of proposed standards presented to the Metropolitan Council of the Rabbinical Assembly, the international association of Conservative rabbis.

The standards were submitted by the new president of the Council, Rabbi Samuel Schafler, of Temple Gates of Prayer, in Flushing, L. I., to the winter conference of the Council held in conjunction with the Philadelphia Region of the Assembly, at West Orange, New Jersey.

The proposed guidelines concern all aspects of weddings, from preliminary arrangements through the ceremony, the catering arrangements, and the wedding banquet.

All weddings must meet the "religious standards of the rabbi" if they are to be performed in his synagogue, and all aspects of the marriage ceremony, the Halachic (Jewish Law) and religious requirements, the procedure at the ceremony, and the "kashrut" at the banquet must meet his approval, according to Rabbi Schafler's proposals.

"When a rabbi of a congregation determines that the requirements of Jewish law make a couple ineligible for marriage in the synagogue, the couple may not be married in that synagogue even by another rabbi," the standards declare.

Where a "mashgiach" (rabbinical supervisor) is employed to supervise "kashrut," he serves under the rabbi of the congregation, and no "contractual arrangements between a family and caterer can bind the congregation unless the religious requirements for eligibility for 'kiddushin' (religious marriage) as set down by the rabbi have been met."

As to preliminary arrangements, under the proposed standards, a couple wishing to be married in the synagogue must meet with the rabbi for a pre-marital interview to enable the rabbi to discuss aspects of Jewish home life and synagogue affiliation as well as details of the ceremony itself. Couples will also be encouraged to meet with the cantor to discuss appropriate music for the ceremony.

Adherence to the tradition of "aufruf", to the "calling up" of the bridegroom to the Torah on the Sabbath preceding the wedding, will be encouraged. Women in the wedding party will be urged to dress "in a manner befitting the sanctity of the synagogue" and to wear a suitable head covering in the sanctuary proper. Receptions involving the "consumption of alcoholic beverages before the ceremony should be strongly discouraged."

As for the ceremony itself, the rabbi and cantor of the congregation officiate at all weddings in the synagogue, and guest rabbis may co-officiate only with the express permission of the rabbi of the synagogue, who is the sole determinant of the religious requirements, the nature of the ceremony, and the extent of the guest rabbi's participation. Also, guest cantors may co-officiate only with the express permission of the cantor of the congregation.

The proposed standards "strongly urge" the use of the Rabbinical Assembly's "ketubah", marriage contract, a "significant portion of which should be read" in the original language by the rabbi. Music would not be permitted during this reading.

No photographs would be permitted during the ceremony, and the "tradition of both parents escorting the children to the "chupah" (wedding canopy) would be strongly encouraged."

The banquet following the wedding ceremony is a religious ceremony in itself, Rabbi Schafler reminds, and should include the wearing of head coverings during the meal, the blessing of the bread, the grace after meals, and the "seven blessings for the bride and bridegroom.

The proposed standards will be laid before the Metropolitan Council for final action, and offered to the entire Rabbinical Assembly for discussion and possible adoption.

Jewish Labor Committee Asks Probe Of N.Y. Police Membership In Birch Society

The Jewish Labor Committee, a national civil rights and community relations agency representing 500,000 Jewish trade unionists, entered the simmering controversy in New York over police membership in the John Birch Society with a request to Mayor Lindsay that the city Investigations Commissioner be directed to initiate a probe into the extent and propriety of police membership in the Society.

Acting on the decision of the organization's administrative committee that the issue must be pursued because of national ramifications of Police-Birch relations and membership, Charles S. Zimmerman, chairman of the JLC has asked Mayor Lindsay to "pick up where former Mayor LaGuardia left off" by conducting a probe of the Birch Society similar to the inquiry former city Investigations Commissioner William B. Herlands, now a Federal Court Justice, directed in 1942-43 into police membership in the Christian Front, a hate-group, then active.

The Jewish Labor Committee statement took note that one of the key problems of law enforcement, particularly in Northern communities, is potential conflict between minority groups and between underprivileged minorities and the police. "Since the Birch Society has served to intensify rather than lessen distrust, suspicion, and tension between groups in our urban areas, it is questionable whether a police officer who subscribes to its tenets can equitably and impartially discharge his function," said Mr. Zimmerman.

"Despite the disclaimers of Birch Society leaders, it is evident also that the group is the home of anti-Semitic and anti-Negro elements. The California legislative report of 1965 made note of the alarming rise of anti-Semitism within the Society. We believe that in the case of the Birch Society, as in the case of the Christian Front, we are dealing with a group that sows the seeds of fear and division among different ethnic groups, and we question whether police membership in such an organization is consonant with conscientious performance of duty.

"Accordingly, the Jewish Labor Committee urges that the new Commissioner of Investigations ascertain the facts and make them public. Thus the citizenry will be informed and on guard against the weakening of the democratic fibres of our society, and at the same time, the City of New York will render a service to the Police Departments of the nation, where the same problem is being increasingly faced."
